The Fashion Revolution China exhibition examines the changes in China Fashion during three periods of the 20th century. The exhibition and publication focuses on the narrative of the clothing; each section within the exhibition has its own unique story.

Interwoven amongst the clothing and visuals that were exhibited are personal stories that not only give background information and individuality to the garments but reflect the tremendous changes that took place in China both socially, economically and politically.

Fashion by its very nature, is a language of non-verbal communication, which indicates rank, occupation social standing and the effects of the shifting political and social environments.

The publication has three sections Extravagance/Pre-1949, Uniform/Post-1949 and Contemporary Designers which explore the changes in Chinese clothing and culture across the 20th Century.
