Kirsten is Associate Professor and Principal Lecturer in Graphic Design History and Theory. She graduated with BA (Hons) History of Design & the Visual Arts, Staffordshire Polytechnic and gained an MA in Graphic Design, Leicester Polytechnic. She completed her PhD in 2013 at University of Brighton. Kirsten started teaching in 1987 and has developed an international reputation for innovative approaches to learning and teaching and a passion for design. She was awarded a National Teaching Fellowship (Experienced Staff category) and £50,000 to support a learning and teaching project, by the Higher Education Academy in 2004. She is a lifelong NTF.

Kirsten is Chair of the Committee of the Association of National Teaching Fellows; Co-Chair of the Multi-National Teaching Fellows Group and elected Executive member of the Group for Learning in Art and Design (GLAD).

Kirsten has extensive teaching experience across a range of levels and disciplines within art, design and media. Her passions, research and scholarly activities extend across a range of diverse fields. Working internationally, cross-discipline, creating and developing learning and teaching case-studies and materials, her activities extend to a significant number of collaborative and advisory roles across HE – including External Examinerships. She works with a number of NTFs.

In 2004 Kirsten was invited to attend Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth 2 Reception at Buckingham Palace in Celebration of the British Design Industry and Excellence in Teaching.

Kirsten's research includes scholarship of teaching and learning in art and design; creativity; packaging design; kitsch and flock. She has authored a range of articles and papers and is an experienced conference and event organiser. She has curated numerous exhibitions including Flockage: the flock phenomenon, the world's first flock exhibition, co-curated with Pam Langdown. She created her home institution's registered design museum. In 2004 Kirsten secured an AHRC award www.ahrc.ac.uk/awards/search_results.asp to support the collaborative project – www.plasticsnetwork – that focused upon the Institution's registered Museum plastics collection (MoDiP). From 2008-2010, working with colleagues from the University of the Arts London and the University of Surrey. Kirsten was Project Leader on the 'Creative Interventions: valuing and assessing creativity in student work-related learning in the public and not-for-profit sectors' NTF Group Project which secured an HEA funding award of £200,000. This project involved students from across the partner universities working together.

A popular speaker and workshop facilitator, Kirsten continues to present at many conferences in the UK, Europe, Canada, USA and Australia and networks internationally with educational establishments and design organisations.

Kirsten's learning and teaching research themes are varied and include: threshold concepts; problem-based learning; groupwork; visual plagiarism; and notions of excellence and reward schemes. In particular she is interested in:

- how scholarship of teaching and learning exists within HE art, design & media and how it is encouraged, supported, rewarded and disseminated.

- how design objects from HE collections and museums can be used as learning and teaching resources – case study on toilet brushes.

In 2007 as Chair of Higher Education Subject Centre Art Design and Media she Chaired the Teaching Fellowship Scheme Steering Group and was key creator of the scheme's framework.

On Trial* Project

Kirsten's NTF award funded the development of her On Trial project: experiential, student-centred, problem-based role play learning and teaching. Inspired by the mock trial of legal education/practice and in the popular media, she works with students and colleagues cross-discipline to develop this learning experience. On Trial work is used extensively across a variety of contexts internationally. Kirsten's Project embraces a variety of research strands that relate to her core interests: – innovative methodologies and materials re: problem based learning – strategies for 'teaching without talking' – student based learning – exploration of cross-discipline approaches to learning and teaching.

On Trial workshops have been staged nationally – including Leeds Met. Uni; Southampton Solent University; University of Warwick. In 2007 Kirsten presented with AUB BA(Hons) Graphic Design students Keir Cooper and Lindsay Noble at HEA Subject Centre for Legal Education Annual Conference, University of Warwick. Her research relating to this project has been published extensively: for example On Trial: teaching without talking.
