

LIFE SCULPTING - AN INTRODUCTION

Autumn Term: Thursday 12th October – 14th December 2017

Spring Term: Thursday 18th January – 22nd March 2018

Course Tutor: Julia Carter

Course Overview

This introductory course is ideal for anyone seeking to learn and develop their skills in threedimensional sculpture, working with clay.

Delivered in Arts University Bournemouth specialist workshop facilities, with a life model for the duration of the course.

Through a combination of theory, practical workshops and group collaboration, you will quickly master the art of fashioning and sculpting (air-drying) clay into full-size replicas of your study.

Life Sculpting is all about combining skills. During the course a combination of a prescriptive measuring techniques shall be understood and practiced, along with a basic knowledge of human anatomy, observation and artistic interpretation will align together. The course will develop your fundamental practical skills and provide the theory required to sculpt the human head using clay. You will be encouraged to explore your full potential, and will finish the course with a three-dimensional representation of the model.

The Course Includes

- Introduction to and the use of an armature
- Introduction to facial anatomy
- Following a measuring system and transferring this to your sculpt
- The provision of a model for the duration of the course
- The techniques required to work with clay

Course Aims

- Provide a relaxed environment
- Encourage artistic initiative and interpretation
- Enhance your observation skills
- Develop your understanding of facial anatomy
- Deliver the skills required to work within a three-dimensional format
